kkieckhafer@goldmanismail.com

Katherine specializes in complex trial litigation involving scientific and technical subject matter, including intellectual property litigation. Her cases have involved a wide array of subject matters, including small-molecule drugs, biologics, genetic testing platforms, medical devices, offshore wind turbines, and baby car seats. She has experience in all phases of litigation, from pre-litigation diligence to appeal, including extensive trial experience coordinating teams and presenting witnesses in court. In addition to her trial experience, Katherine has a fulsome pro bono practice that includes representing pro se litigants before the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

Prior to joining Goldman Ismail, Katherine practiced at other leading national law firms. Katherine earned her B.S. in cellular and molecular biology from the University of Michigan, her M.S. in biochemistry, molecular, and cellular biology from Cornell University, and her J.D. magna cum laude from the University of Florida Levin College of Law. After graduation, and before entering private practice, Katherine clerked on the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.
