Kimberly's education and experience as a physician and scientist informs her approach to defending claims brought against medical-device manufacturers, pharmaceutical manufacturers, and health-care providers. With Kimberly's unique skillset, clients turn to her to recruit, develop, and manage affirmative scientific experts; to develop effective cross-examination of and motions to exclude opposing scientific experts; to depose health-care-provider fact witnesses; and to develop the facts of scientifically or clinically complex cases. Kimberly also coordinates with other law firms to manage scientific and clinical fact and expert discovery in scientifically and clinically complex cases. Kimberly has experience successfully defending clients in a range of health-care and life-sciences matters, including products-liability cases, complex commercial disputes, government investigations, national opioid litigation, and litigation arising under the False Claims Act, health care fraud statutes, the Federal Drug and Cosmetic Act, and the Anti-Kickback Statute.

Kimberly has a specialized ability to create legal strategies that harmonize scientific and clinical messaging across complex matters. Kimberly's experience as an academic physician at Stanford University and the University of California, San Diego as well as her experience publishing book chapters and articles in peer-reviewed journals, including the Journal of the American Medical Association, give her specialized expertise in leveraging the medical literature to the benefit of clients as part of the fact and expert discovery process.

Kimberly came to the firm after graduating from Northwestern University Feinberg School of Medicine and Stanford Law School, practicing as a primary care physician for nearly ten years, and practicing law at Jones Day in the health care and life sciences group.
